

```
#Basic dictionary functions
```

```
man = {"name":"gokul","age":24, "country":"USA"} man
```

```
↻ {'name': 'gokul', 'age': 24, 'country': 'USA'}
```

```
#How to change the value in a dictionary
```

```
man["age"]=45
man
```

```
↻ {'name': 'gokul', 'age': 45, 'country': 'USA'}
```

```
#How to print all the keys in a dictionary
```

```
for x in man:
    print (x)
```

```
↻ name
age
country
```

```
#How to print the values in a dictionary
```

```
for x in man:
    print(man[x])
```

```
↻ gokul
45
USA
```

```
#How to check the value or key in a dictionary
```

```
for x in man.values():
    if x == "gokul":
        print("yes, gokul exists in the dictionary")
    else:
        print("no, the value doesn't exists") #So if the command for else statment would be kep as it is then the problem is that it
```

```
↻ yes, gokul exists in the dictionary
no, the value doesn't exists
no, the value doesn't exists
```